Structure

The fields, framing

Where to describe your articles and how to present your findings?

How to organize your key findings from your articles

The tricky part is saying something more than the articles

Articles are one thing, but this should be something more. Raising the abstraction level.

How could I make some new arguments and categorizations based on the results.

Tying up the various threads

Articles have their questions, but should this have new questions?

Qualitative tables:

1. Presenting articles and their questions
2. How the articles answer the questions presented on this integrative chapter
3. What conceptualizations I have made up based on the previous

Kill your darlings!

Thinking afterwards

- Integrative chapter as storage for your later work
- Make it simple – making reading easier won't hurt
- Everybody loves visualizations, if they make it clearer
- Its all about the questions
- I suggest you to edit the manuscript well – at least to look good – before sending it to pre-examiners.
 - You might get rejected. Use the template, or make yours similar.
